

Chris taught in the Department of Natural Resources at UNH and lectured at Granite State College since 1993. Her MS in Conservation Biology focused on wolf recovery in the UP of Michigan, but her real education took place in NH on her sheep farm, where she figured out how to farm sheep while sharing land with coyotes. She is now the NH and VT Rep for Project Coyote, a national organization promoting coexistence with coyotes. For over 40 years, Chris has provided presentations throughout New England on the Eastern Coyote and the Eastern Wolf. She is a member of the Northeast Wolf Recovery Coalition and leads Wolf Trips to Algonquin Provincial Park to track the Eastern Wolf.

Her interests include winter tracking, kayaking, hiking, playing piano, and appreciating Appalachian roots music.
